

GAYNOR'S CHARGES IN EAGAN CASE ALL LAID ON DETECTIVE

Barry on Trial Because He Arrested Boy Later Championed by Mayor.

Mayor Gaynor's letter to Police Commissioner Waldo condemning the arrest of William Eagan, a Brooklyn boy, on what the Mayor believed was insufficient indication of his guilt of a robbery, was recalled today by the arraignment of former Detective B. A. Barry for trial before Deputy Commissioner Walsh.

Barry, who since August, when he arrested Eagan, has been put on uniform duty in this borough, is charged with neglect of duty, conduct unbecoming an officer, conduct contrary to the peace and welfare of the public and insubordination.

The specifications recite that he was told to look into a robbery at the home of Charles W. Daniels, No. 449 State street, and that four days later he arrested the Eagan boy, took him before Magistrate Reynolds and had him held for vagrancy, though he well knew the boy had a home and was contributed to the support of the family.

Barry was defended by Lawyer Florence Sullivan who many years ago was manager of a semi-professional baseball club in which the accused man was the star pitcher.

Alfred Edsall, now of No. 57 Nevins street, but in August janitor of a row of fourteen houses at No. 33 Fourth avenue, testified as to the boy's identity and said William, who is his step son, slept and had his meals at home.

Following this testimony the trial was adjourned until Tuesday to hear Magistrate Reynolds, who was unable to attend today.

PAY DEMANDED OF POOR BY BIG HOSPITAL.

An editorial statement in the New York Medical Journal that one of the big private hospitals of New York sends bills to charity patients or their families when it has been agreed they are to receive free treatment, aroused comment today among hospital authorities and lecturers. The editorial states in part:

"At least one great and wealthy hospital, supported by voluntary contributions for the poor of New York, the routine practice, recently adopted, is to send a bill for two weeks' board and services—amounting to $12—to every charity patient or his family immediately after his admission, even when it has been distinctly agreed that the patient is unable to pay and is to receive free treatment. This particular institution has for a generation been the recipient of rich legacies and generous gifts from warm-hearted and charitable benefactors."

The editor of the Medical Journal declines to give the name of the hospital, but declares that a thorough investigation was made and that the charge is true.

The authorities of the principal hospitals denied that the editorial referred to their institutions.

Tetrazzini as Lucia at Metropolitan

Former Star of Mr. Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House Makes a Hit at Her First Appearance on Broadway—The Sextet Repeated.

BY SYLVESTER RAWLING.

TETRAZZINI, who helped largely to make the success of Mr. Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House, had her hour of triumph at the Metropolitan Opera House last night when she appeared there for the first time as the distressed heroine of Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor." The house was crowded to capacity. Only Caruso could have evoked plaudits as great. After the immortal sextet, all the distinguished, approved and proper traditions of the house were abandoned. The opera halted while the applause kept up, and was resumed only when the concerted number was repeated. As an old-fashioned and sarcastic friend of the writer remarked, "The management had advertised a performance of opera, but the audience—who had paid the bill and desired to name the tune—preferred a concert." There is always some worn and battered opera-goer whose only object in life seems to be to take the joy out of it. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the one and only Tetrazzini made a great hit, and probably has restored the opera to the repertory from which some of us hoped it had permanently dropped out.

Mme. Tetrazzini, naturally, was a bit nervous when she first appeared, and something of the heat in her voice that she had seemed to get rid of in her concert here last spring was noticed again, but only for a short time. Soon she revealed herself in all the splendor of upper notes that have been and are unrivaled, and in the middle and lower voice registers the equal of any living coloratura soprano. Not even the most modernized of us could resist the charm of such singing. It was irresistible. The voice calms and gymnastics of the mad scene were superbly done.

To support Mme. Tetrazzini, Florentino Constantino had been brought over from Boston to impersonate Edgardo. He has many admirers here as well as there and he sang very well, but our own Metropolitan Opera Company would seem to be strong enough in tenors to make the excellent unnecessary. There was a commanding Ashton in our own Pasquale Amato, sonorous and rich in voice as usual, and an excellent Italian tenor, Herbert W. Thompson. Besides these, there were Marie Matfield, who made of Alisa a real character, Angelo Rada as Arturo and Pietro Andisio as Norberto. Sturani conducted. After the opera the Russian dancers, who are a great attraction and who are to appear here only two weeks more.

SHOOTING IN CHURCH SHOW.

Staid Methodists of Morristown, N. J., got a shock last night at a moving-picture show which was the feature of the Sunday school's Christmas entertainment. One film showed a battle between white men and Indians. There was much shooting and when the Indians were repulsed the boy spectators loudly applauded and whistled.

Another film showed the love affairs of a thinly clad young woman, which ended with her marriage to a young man. A Catholic priest performed the ceremony. When he made the sign of the cross a boy spectator asked "What's that man doing?"
